Core component
Core subjects are the foundation of your Asian Studies degree. Choose from:

- Foundations for Asian Studies A
- Foundations for Asian Studies B
- Introduction to Asian Politics

The minimum requirement is two subjects.

Language component
Choose a language from the following list:

- Arabic, Chinese, French, Hindi, Indonesian, Japanese, Korean, Sanskrit, Spanish, Thai, Urdu or Vietnamese.

The minimum requirement is four subjects in your chosen language.

Regional component
Study a region of the Asia-Pacific. Gain an in-depth understanding of the issues that the region faces.

- Islam in Southeast Asia
- Gender, Labour and Capitalism in East Asia
- India Arriving: Security & International Relations in South Asia
- Pacific Studies in a Globalizing World
- The Politics of China

Discipline component
Choose subjects about topics such as archaeology, art, culture, history, international relations, international security, politics, pop-culture, religion and more.

- Culture & Modernity in Asia
- International Relations of the Asia-Pacific
- Politics in Central Asia
- What is Literature? Asian Perspectives

Flexible component
Expand the language or regional or discipline components of your degree. Choose subjects which fit within these components.

The minimum requirement is 2 subjects.

ASIA3000-level subject
3000-level subjects are the most challenging and are intended for later-year students.

The minimum requirement is one ASIA3000-level subject. Some examples are:

- The Origins of the International Order in Southeast Asia
- Globalising Southeast Asia: Capitalism, Media, and 21st Century Cultures

Elective study
Choose elective subjects from almost anywhere in the University.

Please note: If you are studying a flexible double degree you must ensure you meet the requirements of your other degree before choosing additional subjects.

Your degree
Australia is increasingly looking to Asia – strategically, economically, politically, and culturally – all eyes are on the graduates of tomorrow to take us there. Are you ready to lead us into the Asian Century?

With a Bachelor of Asian Studies you will master an Asian language, acquire in-depth knowledge of the region, and graduate with a standout degree which will get you noticed by employers.
