Jonathan D. London is a professor in the Department of Asian and International Studies at the City University of Hong Kong. His interests concern the political economy of East Asia, though his research has focused mostly on Viet Nam. Jonathan’s scholarship examines numerous aspects of social life in Viet Nam within the context of continuity and change in that country’s political, economic, and welfare institutions. His publications include Education in Viet Nam (ISEAS 2011), Politics in Contemporary Viet Nam (Palgrave-Macmillan forthcoming) and numerous peer-reviewed articles and book chapters. Also Jonathan has consulted to the United Nations Development Program and Unicef in Viet Nam. He holds a PhD from the University of Wisconsin-Madison.

Tu Dang is Deputy Director General of the National Financial Supervisory Commission (NFSC), in charge of financial stability reports to Prime Minister. Before that, he had 12 years working for the Ministry of Finance as a senior economist. His research areas are macro-prudential supervision, monetary economics and applied econometrics. He has co-authored several comparative studies on vulnerability to poverty in countries in Asia and the Pacific and on inflation variability and the relationship between inflation and growth, with publications appearing in journals such as the European Journal of Comparative Economics, the Asian Economic Journal and Economic Change and Restructuring. He holds a PhD from the Australian National University (ANU).

Tuong Vu is an associate professor of Political Science at the University of Oregon. His book, Paths to Development in Asia: South Korea, Vietnam, China, and Indonesia (Cambridge 2010), received a 2011 Bernard Schwartz Award Honorable Mention. He serves on the editorial board of the Journal of Vietnamese Studies and is co-editor of Dynamics of the Cold War in Asia: Ideology, Identity, and Culture (Palgrave 2009) and Southeast Asia in Political Science: Theory, Region, and Qualitative Analysis (Stanford 2008). He has published in scholarly journals, including World Politics, Journal of Southeast Asian Studies, Journal of Vietnamese Studies, Studies in Comparative International Development, Communist and Post-Communist Studies, South East Asia Research, and Theory and Society. Currently he is completing a book about the Vietnamese revolution as a case of radical movements in international politics. He holds a PhD from Berkeley.

Thiem Hai Bui is a PhD candidate in political science at the University of Queensland and deputy director of Department for General Affairs at the Institute for Legislative Studies (ILS) of the National Assembly Standing Committee of Vietnam. His research has been published in international peer-reviewed scholarly journals like the Global Chance, Peace and Security and the Global Studies Journal and Vietnamese journals such as the Communist Review and the Journal of Legislative Studies.
Bui Ngoc Son is lecturer at Vietnam National University—Hanoi, PhD candidate at University of Hong Kong, and a visiting scholar at Tsinghua University (October, 2013). His scholarly interests include Vietnamese constitutional issues; law and culture; political theories; and the relationship between Confucianism and constitutionalism. He has published extensively in Vietnamese on constitutional law and political philosophy. His English publications appear in Australian Journal of Legal Philosophy, National Taiwan University Law Review, Journal of Oriental Studies, and Chinese Journal of Comparative Law.

John Gillespie is a professor of law and director of the Asian Regulatory Group in the Department of Business Law, Monash University. His research and teaching interests include East Asian comparative law, law and development theory, regulatory theory and land disputes. He has published widely on these topics and his most recent books are (with M. Dowdle and I Maher) eds., Asian Capitalism and the Regulation of Competition: Towards a Regulatory Geography of Global Competition Law (Cambridge 2013) and (with Pip Nicholson) eds., Law and Development and the Global Discourses of Legal Transfers (Cambridge 2012). He has also consulted to international donors such as the World Bank, UNDP, IFC, Danida, Asia Foundation and AusAID on legal development projects in East Asia.

Philip Taylor is an anthropologist in the Department of Anthropology, ANU who has been conducting research in the Mekong delta since the early 1990s. He has lived for five years in this region and speaks Vietnamese and Khmer. He is the sole author of four books on the history, religious life and ethnic communities of Southern Vietnam, along with numerous scholarly articles in journals such as Modern Asian Studies, the Journal of Vietnamese Studies and the Australian Journal of Anthropology, among others. He has edited three multi-author volumes on contemporary Vietnam stemming from the Vietnam Update conference series. He is Editor of the Asia-Pacific Journal of Anthropology, published by Taylor and Francis.

Nguyen Trinh Minh Anh is a PhD candidate in the Graduate School of Environmental Science of Okayama University, Japan. His initial study in natural resource use in upland Vietnam led him to an interest in how the world of indigenous peoples in these mountainous frontiers changed as a result of institutionalization. Before researching his PhD, he was working for a local organization in Thua Thien Hue province to raise rural community’s environmental awareness.

Bui Thi Bich Lien is a PhD candidate in the Department of Business Law and Taxation, Monash University. Her research focuses on the interactions between regulatory communities in resolving civil disputes in Vietnam. Before commencing her PhD, Lien worked in Vietnam for 18 years in the legal profession. This included work at Hanoi Law University; commercial law practice for Baker&McKenzie and Vietnam International Law Firm; and law reform projects for the Asia Foundation, the Canadian International Development Agency, and the European Union.
2013 Vietnam Update: Speakers Biographies

Thai Huynh Phuong Lan is a PhD candidate in the Department of Anthropology, School of Culture, History and Language in the College of Asia and the Pacific, ANU. Her research interests are on ethnicity and gender relations, with current research focusing on the harmony and conflict in the married lives of Khmer–Kinh mixed couples. Lan started her PhD at the ANU in 2011. Before that, she followed and completed her MSc degree in Gender and Development Studies in Asian Institute of Technology in Thailand from 2007 to 2009, with her thesis focusing on “Gender Impacts of Cross-border Works”. Lan has been working as a lecturer in An Giang University in Vietnam since 2005.

Thai Thi Ngoc Du is currently director of Gender and Society Research Center at Hoa Sen University, Ho Chi Minh City, Viet Nam. Throughout her career Ngoc Du has made every effort to revive the field of social sciences in Vietnamese higher education. She pioneered the creation of Gender Studies and Social Work at the Open University. She has participated in numerous domestic and international conferences on women’s issues and environmental preservation, and has led research efforts and authored publications on both subjects at a time when such fields of endeavour were on the minds of few Vietnamese.

Tran Van Kham
Tran Van Kham is working in University of Social Sciences and Humanities, Vietnam National University–Hanoi as vice-director of Office for Research Affairs. He graduated the BA and MA in Sociology from Vietnam National University–Hanoi and completed his PhD in Social Work and Social Policy from University of South Australia in 2012. His main research interests are social inclusion; community development; people with disabilities in Vietnam; and contemporary youth studies and youth value orientation in Vietnam.

Duc Anh Do completed his PhD degree on “Television, Urbanisation and Development in Hanoi, the capital city of Vietnam” in 2012. His research investigated television use and perceptions of the new rural-urban migrants residing in Hanoi, and the ideological role of television in relation to their daily lives. He has presented academic papers at international conferences held in China, Sweden, Vietnam and Australia.